New Law on Safety of Mine Workers in Works

Debjoy Sengupta

Kolkata: Outsourced mine workers are 2.5 times more susceptible to accidents than their departmental counterparts. In an effort to reduce the number of accidents the Directorate General of Mines Safety (DGMS) is pushing a proposed legislation that would require chief executives of a company to be made responsible for accidents. Large groups like Adani, Aditya Birla and Reliance as well as Coal India and NTPC and a host of other mining service providers are likely to be affected by the change. While Adani and Aditya Birla groups offer mining development services, Reliance Power mines its own coal. "Coal companies as well as other miners should employ outsourcing agencies and mining development companies that have excellent safety records," said PK Sarkar, Director General of Mines Safety. "At present, the law requires appointing a nominee owner for every operational mine who is held responsible in case of mishaps. These executive may be held responsible for accidents but in most cases they do not have the adequate authority to make necessary changes to either avert an accident or improve safety standards." Making CEO of a company responsible is the best solution to tackle the issue, Sarkar said, as she/he would have the necessary authority and wherewithal to make changes to increase safety. The amendment was proposed in 2010 and was subsequently referred to the group of ministers which is finalising the proposal.
